The rest of the programme will include the following handleap events: 100 yards dash, 200, 440, and 880 yards, and onemile runs, 150 and 220 cards hurdle, and the running high jump. It is probable that one and two-mile handleap cycle events will be added to the programme. PAN-AMERICAN SPORTS.

The committee on sports at the Pan-American Exposition and of which James & Sufficien is manager has engaged W. H. Robertson, of New York, to boild the running track in the Stadium at Buffalo. As Robertson is well known as one of the yeary best builders of tracks in the comtry, runners are assured of a good, sound and fast track—one capable of helping along to now records. The path will be consequence units in circumference and will consist of alternate layers of loam and cinders, rolled and bardened, giving it life, springiness, and security.
The annual track and field games for

There is a prospect now of an informal exhibition being held to show the clever class work the members are doing ininvidually and in squads. It will not take the form of contests, but will simply be on exhibition of methods and the kind of results they bring.

The bowlers under Captain Cox have, by no means, given up hope of finishing at or near the top of the league standing.
By winning three straight from the Goldor Eagles last Monday the Carrolls boossod themselves up pretty well, and looked as if they would craw right up to the Jolly Fat Men, who are bodding down second place, but the latter needed more games, and Westnesday took two games from the Columnian and again drew

CANINE GOLF ADJUNCTS.

Dogs Trained to Take an Active Part in the Game.

Dogs Trained to Take an Active Part in the Game.

(From the Brooklyn Eggle.)

The Tools dog' is quite the latest thing in canines, like wise in golf, and for the information of those tarily cross who have not heard of the breed it is said that it is a development of a cross between a Scotch callie and a retriever, with a little Toomer's thrown in.

The father of this race lives at St. Andrews, Scotland, and looks like a wirehaired fox terrier, somewhat shopworn about the body, but with a highly intelligent countenance and a douged determination to enforce his charge of a bone a round. His name is Micky, but this should not be held against him, for it is presumed that the time-homored custom of naming the dog without consulting him was followed in this case.

Micky is not a new cognomen to the locality of St. Andrews, but it is said that there was no member of that name on the rolls of the Toyal and ancient, so they concluded to try it on the dog.

Micky is not a player, although he is at times an active participant. He has a swinging gait and san keep his eye on the ball in spite of any conversation that may be going on at the time, This is saying a good dead, as Micky aservices are only required when some doffer togs into the pond and the conversation at such times is not always entirely pacific.

When a scratch man comes to the tee, Micky retires to the woods or does some scratching on his own account. But let a duffer show his face hear the pond and Micky is all attention. This power of discrimination has made Micky very popular with the scratch players. As the duffers say the solver obligations to him, he gets along pretty well on the whole.

As before mentioned, when a duffer gets with a critical eye, and when he whacks the solver obligations to him, he gets along pretty well on the whole.

As before mentioned, when a duffer gets with a critical eye, and when he whacks the solver obligations in biddir, his eagle eye nutil it dips over the hill. Then, the golfer model in the unfortuninate duffer plays from

At first glance the typical qualities of the Swiss chalet seem picturesqueness, harmony with the surrounding features, and a certain fameiral and toylike aspect. To compare it with the bare, rectangular, white-painted and green-blinded wooden dwelling that has grown up indigenous in the United States seems a far cry; and yet the fundamental principle which gave birth to the two is identical—namely, the logical attempt to meet in wooden architecture the needs of climatic conditions as simply as possible. Indeed the most direct way to examine the typical features of the chalet h, perhaps, to take up the successive conditions which the Swiss builders were forced to meet, and to observe how they have met them.

Wood, as a material, was almost forced upon them, both by its plenteonianess and by the difficulty of transporting sione to the maccessible heights where the dwellings were required to be niched. But wood once accepted by them as a material, they did not, like out New England builders, strive to conceal the constructive features which is necessitated, by an uninteresting yell of clapboards and by a further coating of paint, but, on the contrary, emphasized the constructive skeleton to its atmost. The brackets which support the roof are enermous, the Boar beams, the division into stories, show from the front, and mething of the framing of windows is historen. The wood liself too, instead of being painted, is left in its natural color, merely being treated with a preservative coating of librated oil, and thus the exteriors of these chalets have acquired with age an exquisite tone which makes the habitation a thing in matural harmony with its surroundings.

The climate of such a mountainous country as Switzerland, where both rain and snow are abundant and the winter is very cold, induced other marked peculiarities in the chalet. It was necessary to project the wooden walls against moisture, and this necessity variously modified the shapes of the plain, the s the sole logical and rational form un-the conditions.

In the other hand, in the chalets built the mountain sides where snow is vey and abundant, roofs instead of be-built so as to throw off the snow, are tened that the snow may accumulate on them, and by its covering protect welling from the extreme cold, ess flat roofs are accordingly usually used by long, horizontal beaugs pro-tine beyond the house and forming vals not only serve the same pur-but weight the roof against the pose, but weight the roof against the monutain gales.

In both types of roof the extension of the saves, originally intended nearely as protection for the walls, was exaggerate by the Swiss builders, until the roof offer projects from four to tenfect on the front and on the sides sometimes it is so widel extended as to come down within three four feet of the ground, where it is supported by posts. The sides being thus among above the level and bale onlies or (ed b) posts. The sides being thus an sheltered, galleries and bateonies ar-old there, and an exterior staircase an unusual feature. There are als iduced there, and an exterior staircase is not an unusual feature. There are also occasionally small balconies on the front, but only on the upper story, where they may be sheltered by the roat.

The decoration of the exterior by carving, painting, and paneling only emphasizes the organic members. It accentisates the times, adds force to the shadows and brightens the light parts. In the plain and empty spaces of the front and on the fast sales of the consoles it expands into carving of the most decorative character.

The ingenious fancy of the Swins carpenter-atchitects has been pleased to infinitely vary the types of chalet, writes M. Jean Schopfer, "aut they have always remained faithful to the spirit and requirements of the art of building in wood. They have not attempted to apply to wood the law of stone architecture, and it is to this fact that we owe the beauty, the elegance and the originality of the Swins chilet, which holds a place quite apart in the history of architecture.

Almost instantly the committee of inspection, which is always ready to go into season on the down-town streets, gathered about. The big policeman leained over and whispered to the man he had stopped, and the latter startled to search his pockets in a nervous way.

"He's trying to show the cop that he sin't go no swag about bins!" said a wise man in the crowd, which was constantly getting larger and more excited. By this time there were perhaps fifty people standing to the middle of the stroet, and those on the outside were making a transic effort to get a sight of what was going on in the centre. Two or three loaded drays were blocked by the crowd, and their drivers started to express their sen timests in vincrous English.

Said the policeman beld his prisoner by the coat, while the unfortunite man dreet deep into one proket after another, with a look of chagrin on his face.
